

Mr. McCone. Some of the senior officers around Havana may well wear uniforms; some did at the January second parade. The troops keep pretty well out of sight, and there is very little evidence of Soviet military personnel appearing in uniform in the Havana community or in Cuba. Generally the troops are seen at their encampments in fatigue trousers, sometimes a fatigue cap, but they wear sports shirts or undershirts so that they do not appear to be military.